Building an Equal Justice Judiciary:
Progress During the Biden Administration

To build a federal judiciary that delivers equal justice, we need judges who will protect the rights of all people, no matter their race or background. This requires federal judges with different perspectives on the law — judges who have worked as civil rights attorneys, public defenders, and public interest lawyers. Our diverse nation also needs judges who reflect and represent all of us. Research shows that demographic and professional diversity on our courts increases public trust in the judiciary and improves judicial decisionmaking.¹ Yet, for far too long, those selecting and confirming federal judges have not made this a priority.²

The Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights and its Fair Courts Task Force have long advocated for the White House and the Senate to prioritize this diversity and to set the expectation that all judicial nominees possess a demonstrated commitment to civil and human rights.³ At the start of the Biden administration, the White House Counsel’s office joined this effort, requesting that senators recommend diverse nominees with experience as public defenders and civil rights lawyers.⁴ Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Dick Durbin (D-IL) and Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-NY) have prioritized the consideration of nominees in committee and the confirmation of nominees on the Senate floor. And on April 7, 2022, the Senate confirmed Judge Ketanji Brown Jackson to be an associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court — the first Black woman and first former public defender ever to serve on our nation’s highest court. We must build upon this progress in order to make our courts live up to the promise of equal justice for all.

Exceptional Pending Nominees: Circuit Courts

KARLA CAMPBELL, nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, has an impressive legal career that includes a steadfast commitment to advancing equal justice for all. She has worked on numerous cases across many different areas of labor and employment law, including workplace safety, fair wages, and access to benefits, as well as advising labor organizations on best practices. An expert in the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), she has worked tirelessly to defend the contributions and benefits owed to employees. Ms. Campbell has also worked to defend the rights of incarcerated people, as part of a team that brought a class action lawsuit on behalf of incarcerated people in Tennessee who were denied proper medical care.

⁵ Data as of August 1, 2024.
Nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit ADEEL MANGI possesses a strong commitment to equal justice for all. He has extensive civil rights pro bono experience protecting religious freedom and fighting discrimination against Muslim communities. When confirmed, he will be the first Muslim federal appellate court judge in our nation's history and the first Asian American man to serve on the Third Circuit.

Exceptional Pending Nominees: District Courts

Nominee to the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia AMIR ALI's impressive experience in pursuit of equal justice makes him extremely well qualified to serve on the federal bench. Much of his extensive legal career has been dedicated to protecting the rights of people involved in the criminal-legal system, including successfully representing a client who had been wrongfully convicted of murder. He has also held law enforcement accountable for wrongdoing by successfully challenging overbroad applications of qualified immunity for police officers who used excessive force. If confirmed, Mr. Ali would be the first Arab-American judge and the first Muslim judge to serve a lifetime appointment on this court.

Judge MICHELLE WILLIAMS COURT, nominated to the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California, is a fair-minded jurist with experience protecting and defending the rights of all people. Since 2012, she has served on the Los Angeles Superior Court, where she is currently the supervising judge of the civil division. Before becoming a judge, she worked extensively on fair housing issues, protecting the rights of homeowners and tenants to be free from discrimination and violence in their homes. As general counsel of Bet Tzedek Legal Services, which provides free legal services to low-income people, Judge Court oversaw litigation and policy efforts.

Judge MUSTAFA KASUBHAI, nominated to the U.S. District Court for the District of Oregon, has significant experience protecting and defending the rights of working people. While in private practice, he represented injured workers before the Oregon Workers’ Compensation Board (WCB) and was eventually nominated and confirmed to serve on the WCB where he reviewed workers’ compensation claims. Before becoming a magistrate judge for the District of Oregon, Judge Kasubhai spent 11 years serving as a fair-minded state circuit court judge with the Oregon Judicial Department. When confirmed, he will be only the third Muslim judge ever confirmed by the Senate, and the first in Oregon. He will also be the first Asian American lifetime judge on this court.

Judge REBECCA PENNELL, nominated to the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Washington, has devoted her exceptional career to protecting the rights of all people. Since 2016, she has served as a fair-minded judge on the Washington State Court of Appeals. Before becoming a judge, she spent most of her legal career with the Federal Defenders of Eastern Washington and Idaho, representing clients who could not afford an attorney and ensuring they had access to justice. While serving as a public defender, Judge Pennell helped create two reentry drug court programs that provided support services to formerly incarcerated people with a history of substance abuse as they transitioned out of prison. When confirmed, she will be only the second former public defender to ever serve as a lifetime judge on this court.

SARAH RUSSELL, nominated to the U.S. District Court for the District of Connecticut, has shown a strong commitment to public service and equal justice throughout her career. As the director of the legal clinic at Quinnipiac University, she trains future attorneys and leads the clinic's work representing low-income people and its juvenile sentencing project. She previously served as the director of the public interest program at Yale Law School, overseeing their criminal defense, prison legal services, and Supreme Court clinics, and she has experience as a former assistant federal defender with the Office of the Federal Defender.
Sparkle Sooknanan, nominated to the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, has demonstrated her commitment to equal justice throughout her impressive career. She currently serves as the principal deputy assistant attorney general in the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ). Ms. Sooknanan’s work at the DOJ has included protecting access to the ballot box, ensuring fairness in housing and employment, and defending the rights of people with disabilities. During her time in private practice, her robust pro bono work included criminal defense for those unable to afford an attorney, legal counsel to children in need, and legal services for individuals in immigration proceedings. Ms. Sooknanan immigrated to the United States from Trinidad and Tobago and, when confirmed, she will join the extremely small number of Indo-Caribbean lifetime federal judges.

Judge Cynthia Valenzuela Dixon, nominated to the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California, has dedicated much of her impressive career to defending civil and human rights. Currently, she is the supervising judge of the State Bar Court of California, an administrative court that hears all attorney discipline cases. She previously served as the national vice president and director of litigation for the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund (MALDEF), where she worked on cases and briefs supporting educational equity, workers’ rights, voting rights, immigrants’ rights, and marriage equality. Judge Valenzuela also specialized in voting rights as a trial attorney with the civil rights division of the U.S. Department of Justice and served as special assistant to the vice chair of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights.

Confirmed Judges: Highlights

President Biden has nominated exceptional lawyers from diverse backgrounds who are now serving on the bench. For example, Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson (U.S. Supreme Court) is the first Black woman and first former public defender to serve on our nation’s highest court. Her impeccable qualifications include nearly 10 years of experience as a fair-minded jurist and service on the U.S. Sentencing Commission. Judge Nancy Abudu (Eleventh Circuit) spent years as a civil rights litigator at the ACLU’s Voting Rights Project and the ACLU of Florida, and she established the Southern Poverty Law Center’s Voting Rights Practice Group. She is the first Black woman on the Eleventh Circuit and the first person of color ever to serve in a Georgia seat on this court. Judge Nicole Berner (Fourth Circuit) advanced equal justice for working people as general counsel for SEIU and worked to protect people’s access to abortion as a litigator at Planned Parenthood Federation of America. She is the first openly LGBTQ judge on the Fourth Circuit and only the third openly lesbian woman ever to serve on any federal appellate court. Judge Julie Rikelman (First Circuit) possesses exceptional experience defending our right to bodily autonomy, including our right to access abortion, as the litigation director at the Center for Reproductive Rights. She is the first Jewish woman and first immigrant woman to serve on the First Circuit.

Judge Mónica Ramírez Almadani (Central District of California) has steadfastly defended the rights of vulnerable communities through her work at the ACLU, the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Department of Justice, the University of California Irvine School of Law’s Immigrant Rights Clinic, and pro bono legal services organization Public Counsel. She is the only Latina currently serving as a lifetime judge on this court. Judge Nusrat Choudhury (Eastern District of New York) has worked tirelessly challenging discriminatory policies that specifically target communities of color, including leading the ACLU’s litigation strategy and efforts to end the practice of keeping those unable to pay court-imposed fines or fees imprisoned. She is the first Muslim woman ever to serve as a lifetime federal judge. Judge Sara Hill (Northern District of Oklahoma) served as attorney general for the Cherokee Nation, where she oversaw all litigation to which the Cherokee Nation was a party, including several important Indian law cases that went to the U.S. Supreme Court. A Cherokee citizen, she is the first Native American woman ever to serve a lifetime appointment on any federal district court in Oklahoma and only the eighth Native American ever to serve as a lifetime federal judge in our nation’s history.
As director of the Voting Rights Project at the ACLU, Judge Dale Ho (Southern District of New York) has protected civil rights by defending the freedom to vote. He also successfully challenged the Trump administration's misguided efforts to add a citizenship question to the census. Judge Natasha Merle (Eastern District of New York) has critical civil rights experience as deputy director of litigation at the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc. She has also fought bias in our criminal-legal system as a federal public defender. Judge Shanlyn Park (District of Hawaii) spent 20 years in the federal public defender’s office for the District of Hawaii, first as an assistant federal public defender and then as a senior litigator, representing clients who could not afford an attorney to ensure they had access to justice. She is the first Native Hawaiian woman ever to serve as a lifetime federal judge and the second former public defender to serve as a lifetime judge on this court. Judge Casey Pitts (Northern District of California) has dedicated his career to protecting and defending the rights of working people by successfully challenging unfair labor practices across the country. He is the first openly LGBTQ lifetime judge at the time of his confirmation on this court. Judge Hernán Vera (Central District of California) brings to the court outstanding experience pursuing equal justice, including spending 12 years at Public Counsel, the largest pro bono law firm in the nation, where he created an impact litigation department for economic justice. Judge Jamal Whitehead (Western District of Washington) has spent his career defending and protecting the rights of all people, litigating numerous complex cases on behalf of working people on issues such as workplace harassment and discrimination. He is the first nominee from the Biden administration, and one of an extremely small number of federal judges, known to be living with a disability.

These are just a few of the many outstanding judges confirmed by the Senate during the Biden administration.

Opportunities Ahead

In order to build a judiciary dedicated to equal justice, we must ensure that all federal judicial vacancies are filled with qualified nominees committed to civil and human rights. The Senate must confirm the exceptional nominees who are pending. We also call on the Senate and the Biden administration to make diversity a continued priority and support additional diverse nominees, including more Latino and Latina nominees, Native American nominees, LGBTQ nominees, and nominees with disabilities. Additionally, we urge senators and the White House to select nominees who have significant experience in civil rights law, such as economic justice, reproductive rights, LGBTQ equality, disability rights, and voting rights.

There is much work to be done: To date, there are 37 known current or future lifetime judicial vacancies without nominees — 1 on circuit courts and 36 on district courts. Many of these vacancies are in states like Alabama, Texas, Florida, and Missouri where a significant number of civil and human rights cases are heard. Additionally, we may see more vacancies in the near future. Currently, 127 active judges (37 circuit court judges, 90 district court judges) are eligible or will be eligible by December 31, 2024 to take senior status but have not yet announced plans to do so.⁶ Of these judges, 50 were appointed by Democratic presidents (12 circuit court judges, 38 district court judges) and 78 were appointed by Republican presidents (26 circuit court judges, 52 district court judges).⁷ We need fair-minded judges on every court — especially on courts making decisions that threaten our rights.

Additionally, we need to work to modernize our courts so that our federal judiciary can fairly and more effectively administer justice. Congress must pass legislation that modernizes and reforms our courts, including legislation on ethics reforms, such as extension of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges to apply to Supreme Court justices, and further transparency measures and court structure reforms such as expanding the number of authorized judgeships for circuit and district courts. The last time Congress significantly increased lower court judgeships to keep up with population increases was more than 30 years ago. With many courts burdened by exceptionally high caseloads, delays are compromising access to justice for people across the country. It is necessary for Congress to authorize new circuit court and district court judgeships to meet our current needs. In addition, we urge Congress to consider other structural reforms to the Supreme Court.

⁶ Senior status is a form of semi-retirement that creates a vacancy on the court and allows the senior judge to hear a smaller caseload. These numbers are extrapolated from publicly available data provided by the Federal Judicial Center.

⁷ Judge Roger Gregory (4th Cir., Virginia) is counted as nominated by both parties. He was first nominated via recess appointment by President Bill Clinton (D) and then renominated by President George W. Bush (R).
